The 15-Minute Client-Getting Script.

Attack. Relate. Resolve. The exact framework I teach the trainers I work with — written out, start to finish.

*"Posting that you can curl shows that you're strong.
It doesn't show that you're knowledgeable."*

— THE LINE THAT CHANGES HOW TRAINERS POST

BY JASON ODELL · I BUILD TRAINERS CLIENT-GETTING MACHINES

Your content isn't the problem. Your case is.

You post workouts. Form checks. PRs. And the DMs stay quiet — because a client isn't deciding if you're fit. They're deciding if you can be trusted with THEIR body. That takes evidence.

THE BATTERY RULE

A client is a battery. They buy at 100% — and every piece of content that teaches them something charges it.

CAPACITIES DIFFER. Some buy at 4 videos and a few stories. Some need 25.

THE DRAIN IS THE SAME. Miss a day of posting and it drains back toward zero.

You could be one video from the DM. Every client is either charging or draining.

THE 7-14 HOUR RULE

So every video has one job: keep them charging. The framework on the next three pages is how — and it takes fifteen minutes to use.

STEP ONE

Attack.

Open by challenging a belief your ideal client holds. Controversy is not a dirty word — it's the price of the first two seconds.

WHY IT WORKS — THE PSYCHOLOGY

"Some people will think — this guy doesn't know what he's talking about. Let me see HOW MUCH he doesn't know."

Believers stay to agree. Doubters stay to argue. Both watched. You won.

TWO RULES FOR THE ATTACK LINE

MAKE IT EXTREME

Would half your feed argue with it? Not extreme enough.

GIVE IT A VISUAL

"Do you like bread?" Now they SEE it. Concrete beats abstract.

FIELD EXAMPLE — ATTACK FIRST, STORY UNDER IT

"Your clients don't care that you post yourself in the gym."

That's the attack — it calls out what every trainer posts. THEN the story:

"At work I'm in uniform. They never see me train — yet they ask ME for advice."

Attack opens the wound. The story proves you're the one who can close it.

STEP TWO

Relate.

Now tell the moment YOU lived it. Not theory — the scar. This is what separates you from every other trainer posting the same advice: they can copy your tips, they cannot copy your story.

WATCH ONE GET BUILT — A TRAINER'S RELATE, LIVE ON OUR CALL

"I was dirty bulking. Zero energy. Workouts sucked. Wasn't making progress. I ended up with a physique I didn't respect — I couldn't take my shirt off in the gym."

Notice what's in there: a mistake (dirty bulking), a cost (energy, progress), and a private shame (the shirt). That last one is the part people feel.

YOUR RELATE NEEDS THREE PIECES

THE MISTAKE

What you believed or did wrong

THE COST

What it took from you — be specific

THE PRIVATE PART

The thing you'd only admit to a friend

The proof this works: a coworker once saw what I was eating and asked "are you a personal trainer?" — unprompted. Knowledge shows. Stories carry it further than any transformation photo.

STEP THREE

Resolve.

Name the real problem, hand them the fix, and end with one clear next step. Most trainers resolve the symptom. You dig one level down.

THE SYMPTOM

"My workouts suck."

THE ROOT

"No plan. No fuel."

Resolve the ROOT and you sound like a professional. Resolve the symptom and you sound like every other reel on their feed.

HOW TO FIND THE ROOT — ASK WHY, THREE TIMES

"My workouts suck." → why? → "No energy." → why? → "Eating garbage, sleeping five hours." → THERE. The root was never the workout.

Keep asking why until you hit something they can actually change. That's your resolve.

THE SOFT CLOSE — SELL WITHOUT SELLING

"That's why I build every client a nutrition plan — so they don't make the mistake I made. I bridge that gap."

Formula: clear ask + exact action + a reason to act now. One CTA. Same one, every video.

BONUS — THE LOOP

"I went outside today." vs "I went outside today — and guess what?"

Open a question early. Hold the answer to the end. That's why they stay.

THE FRAMEWORK IN MOTION

From vague idea to hook, in four moves.

1 — THE VAGUE VERSION

"You don't have to go low-carb to lose weight."

2 — MAKE IT EXTREME

"Losing weight on a low-carb diet? You're doing it wrong."

3 — AIM AT ONE PERSON · THREE DESCRIPTORS MAX

One identity + one behavior + one goal.

Here: men in your 20s · low-carb · lose weight. ("Young" died — 20s already says it.)

4 — THE FINISHED HOOK · LANDS IN 4 SECONDS

"Men in your 20s — if low-carb is your weight-loss plan, you're doing it wrong."

WHY THREE? BECAUSE THE ALGORITHM IS AN AI.

Instagram's AI reads your words — your speech, your on-screen text, your caption — to decide whose feed to test you in. Three clean descriptors route you precisely. Five is a muddy signal to the machine AND the human.

MIRROR YOUR 3 DESCRIPTORS IN THE CAPTION'S FIRST SENTENCE. KEYWORDS BEAT HASHTAGS.

THE 0-4 SECOND RULE

0:00

0:04 — attack landed, avatar named

0:45

Attack line + your three descriptors, inside four seconds — before your name, before the gym pan. Miss the window, lose the scroll AND the routing.

YOUR SCRIPT — FIFTEEN MINUTES

Fill it in. Film it rough.

1 — ATTACK: A BELIEF YOUR IDEAL CLIENT HOLDS THAT'S WRONG

MAKE IT EXTREME — WOULD HALF YOUR FEED ARGUE?

AIM IT AT ONE PERSON (AGE · GENDER · SITUATION)

2 — RELATE: THE MISTAKE + THE COST + THE PRIVATE PART

3 — RESOLVE: THE ROOT PROBLEM + YOUR FIX + ONE CLEAR CTA

FILM IT ROUGH. POST IT ANYWAY.

*Say it like you'd say it to a friend — the take where you laugh at yourself.
That's the take that lands. We don't have perfect money.*
